The first cell cycle begins with the formation of a zygote from the fusion of a male and female sex cell (gamete). The steps of the cell cycle can be divided into two main components: interphase and the mitotic phase. Interphase is the stage when the cell mostly performs its “everyday” functions.

Regulation of the Cell Cycle by External Events Both the initiation and inhibition of cell division are triggered by events external to the cell when it is about to begin the replication process. An event may be as simple as the death of a nearby cell or as sweeping as the release of growth-promoting hormones, such as human growth hormone (HGH).

The signals are transmitted within the cell by signal transduction pathways. Cells have their built in stop signals that halt the cell cycle at checkpoints until overridden by go-ahead signals. A checkpoint in the cell cycle is a critical control point where stop and go-ahead signals regulate the cycle.

Bing: Cell Cycle Regulation Answer Key

So far, no surprises: cell division (like almost all processes that happen inside cells) is regulated by the presence of certain molecules. Over the course of the cell cycle, the rise and fall of the concentration of these molecules triggers the cell's progress from one phase of the cycle to the next.

G1. Proto-oncogenes (accelerator) cyclin allows cells to pass through G2 and divide. Tumor suppressor genes (brake) would tend to slow down division when cells are crowded. Cancer, which can be considered as unregulated cell division, often results from mutations in proto-oncogenes and tumor suppressor genes.
